Pancreas Journal Announces New Editor in Chief

Dear APA Members,

As many of you know, the multidisciplinary, international journal Pancreas is the official journal of the American Pancreatic Association (APA). Under the dynamic leadership of its inaugural Editor-in-Chief, Vay Liang W. Go, MD, it has served as a central platform for dissemination of state-of-the art insights and research breakthrough for all the APA members and the Pancreas Community at large. After 38 years of tireless devotion to this cause, Dr. Go has decided to retire from his responsibilities at the journal Pancreas. His last day will be March 31, 2023. While it will be hard to fill the void created by Dr. Go's departure, the APA board is unanimously supportive of Dr. Go's recommendation that Ashok K Saluja, PhD assumes the role of the next Editor-in-Chief of our journal Pancreas. To this end, I am delighted to announce that the APA and the publishing company Wolters Kluwer has reached an agreement to jointly manage the journal Pancreas and continue the partnership that was started by Dr. Go. We are confident that the Journal which is freely accessible to all APA members will continue to be the Journal of choice for all APA members and others interested in our field. We are confident that the new Editor-in-Chief Dr. Ashok K Saluja and his new team, which will be up and running soon, will continue to build upon the legacy and vision of its founders and charter a new path of success and visibility for the journal in years to come. The new editorial team, under its new leadership, will be focused on making Pancreas accessible, beneficial, and relevant in serving the needs of the APA members and the scientific community at large. For the success of this endeavor, we seek your support and look forward to your patronage of Pancreas as it seeks to blaze a new path to success.

Sincerely,

Min Li PhD
APA President
